Dear Parent/Carer

Year 12 Reminder

The exam season is well underway for Year 12 students and I hope they have been successful so far. I would like to remind you that A Level lessons will begin again on the 13th June. The period between the return from study leave and the end of term is a key one as staff will teach a big chunk of the syllabus and set summer homework. This gives more time in Year 13 for exam preparation, once teaching of courses is completed.

We ask all students to continue to study all their subjects from Year 12 for the remainder of the Summer term. Every year students who were adamant that they were dropping one subject find that they have unexpectedly done better than they thought and change their mind. This then becomes impossible to rectify if they have missed weeks of teaching.

From 13th June until the end of the academic year all students are expected to attend lessons for at least 95% of this period. Failure to meet this target will jeopardise progression to Year 13, as decisions cannot be finalised until results are known in August.

Yours faithfully

Mr C Dawkins
